The Architectural League's 2016–17 program year affirmed yet again that good ideas and important work come from everywhere.

The Fall Current Work series focused on Latin America, with lectures by Alejandro Araveña (Chile), Giancarlo Mazzanti (Colombia), Tatiana Bilbao (Mexico), and Gloria Cabral and Solano Benítez (Paraguay). Glenn Murcutt (Australia), Lene Tranberg (Denmark), and Kengo Kuma (Japan), along with Chicagoan Theaster Gates and New Yorkers Nat Oppenheimer and Nader Tehrani rounded out the series. In November, we collaborated with Kazi Ashraf and the Bengal Institute for Architecture, Landscapes, and Settlements on a program called Architecture and the Anxieties of Location, which included the presentation of stunning work by Dhaka-based architects Marina Tabassum, Rafiq Assam, and Jalal Ahmad.

In the spring, Emerging Voices from New Orleans, Atlanta, Jackson, MS, Vancouver, Mexico City, Portland, OR—and New York City!—shared their work, as did League Prize winners from Denver, Houston, Syracuse, New York, and Mexico City.

While our annual program series bring talented individuals from far and wide to engage with New York audiences, the League's online magazine, Urban Omnibus, continues to search out and make accessible significant work being carried out by activists, designers, and historians in all corners of New York City. Amanda Schachter and Alexander Levi of SLO Architecture guest-edited a three-part series about cycling, including installments on speed, empathy, and networks, that discussed new developments in New York and systems elsewhere that offer promising ideas for making New York biking safer, faster, and more integrated into the fabric of the city. Omnibus features this year told the stories of people including Veronica Ramirez of the Queens-based Mujeres en Movimiento, who mobilized immigrant mothers to fight for safer streets and bike lanes in her neighborhood of Corona, and Mei Lum, who in partnership with Diane Wong transformed her family's historic porcelain store on Mott Street in Chinatown into a meeting place for her community. And a new series by photographer Stanley Greenberg tantalizes readers with mysterious images of little-known elements of New York's immense water-delivery infrastructure.

This year our work on housing drew on talents both foreign and close to home. In December, the conference Tower, Slab, Superblock: Social Housing Legacies and Futures brought housing activists, architects, and historians from London, Paris, and Toronto to talk about their efforts to save, rethink, and reuse housing of the modernist era. Housing Brass Tacks discussions (and subsequent summaries on Urban Omnibus) explained the nuts and bolts of housing policy, finance, and development practice. And the second iteration of Typecast thoroughly examined, in word, drawings, and photos, the ubiquitous rowhouse as a past, present, and possible future constituent of New York City's urban fabric.

We were extremely honored in May 2017 to award the League's President's Medal to His Highness the Aga Khan, in honor of the fortieth anniversary of the Aga Khan Award for Architecture and in deep admiration of His Highness's lifelong commitment to pluralism. Scholar Homi Bhabha, planner Amanda M. Burden, and architect Diébédo Francis Kéré celebrated His Highness in remarks at the medal dinner.

The work of the League is carried out by a talented staff: program director Anne Rieselbach; development director Nick Anderson (who I am happy to announce was promoted to managing director in June); communications director Jordan Hruska; Urban Omnibus editor-in-chief Mariana Mogilevich; manager of housing initiatives Emily

Schmidt; program associates Matt Ragazzo and Catarina Flaksman; development associate Frances Leslie; executive assistant Diatre Padilla; Urban Omnibus assistant editor Olivia Schwob; and bookkeeper Marla Carter.

The League benefits profoundly from the work of its supportive, collegial, and accomplished board of directors, led by president Billie Tsien. Three long-serving board members, Frank Lupo, Peter Mullan, and Kate Orff, stepped down from the board this year. I thank them for all they contributed, over many years of service, and welcome two new board members, Nader Tehrani and Mabel O. Wilson. I note with deep sadness the death of our long-time board member and life trustee Hugh Hardy in March of 2017.

As this quick recounting of just some of our activities indicates, the League's 2016–17 program and fiscal year was healthy and productive—but it was also very challenging contextually and institutionally. The fraught national political atmosphere and outrageous affronts to essential values of tolerance, inclusion, environmental sanity, social justice, and basic civility provoked many searching discussions among board and staff about how the League could respond to these threats to our collective life in the United States. We identified specific initiatives to focus on in the coming year, including a new national conversation we will initiate, American Roundtable, to look at how diverging conditions and experiences of the constructed environment affect our capacity for mutual understanding and common purpose. Most of all, however, we reaffirmed our commitment to a set of values that energize and motivate the League. As we conceive and carry out our programs, publications, competitions, and special events, we rededicate ourselves to continuously enact our commitment to openness and inclusion, the pursuit of knowledge, the importance of scientific inquiry, and the value of expertise, and we reaffirm our belief that diversity, freedom of expression, the exercise of imagination, the possibility of creating beauty, and pursuit of the common good are indispensable attributes of a civilized society. We advocate and resist by intensifying our commitment to the driving values of the work we have long done.
