New York, NY (September 28, 2026)—The Board of Directors of The Architectural League of New York announced Marianela D'Aprile as the organization's new program director, following an extensive search. D'Aprile succeeds Anne Rieselbach, who transitioned into an advisory role following the close of the spring program season earlier this year.

As program director, D'Aprile will supervise the Program team and have full responsibility for the strategy and success of the League's programs, including ongoing series such as Current Work, Emerging Voices, the League Prize, Student Program, Mentorship Program, From Field to Form, and the Gunther Prize, as well as After Hours and other members-only programs. She will collaborate closely with the League's executive director, Jacob R. Moore, and the Board of Directors.

"Anchored in many years of work in architecture culture, Marianela has demonstrated both passion and expertise in advocating for the built environment and all the people that comprise its professions—qualities that resonate deeply with the League's mission. Her influential voice, critical perspective, and collaborative leadership have made a meaningful impact on the allied fields, and we look forward to welcoming the breadth of experience she brings as we take on this new chapter together," said Jacob R. Moore, executive director of The Architectural League.

D'Aprile comes to the role with a background spanning architectural criticism, editorial strategy, publishing, public programming, and design. In anticipation of her new role, she shares, "I am thrilled to be joining The Architectural League during this period of evolution in its long and important history. In our time of ever-heightening sociocultural fragmentation and alienation, the League, through its programming, plays the essential and increasingly rare role of bringing people together—to challenge one another; wrestle with the pressing issues of our moment; and, crucially, locate meaning in the work they do. It's an honor to be entrusted with carrying forward this essential work."

Prior to joining the League, she served as deputy editor at the New York Review of Architecture (NYRA), where she worked as part of a small team to turn the publication from a small-circulation, hand-folded pamphlet into an essential voice in architectural and cultural criticism in New York and beyond.

As an independent writer, her work has been motivated by a desire to broaden the scope and audience of critical conversations about culture and the built environment. Her writing has been published extensively in outlets including Mother Jones, The Nation, The Architectural Review, Perspecta, the Avery Review, n+1, and NYRA, and has been anthologized in volumes including The Matter of Photography in the Americas (Stanford University Press), Towards Another Architecture (Lund Humphries), Who Can Afford to Be Critical? (Set Margins), and The State of Housing Design (Harvard Joint Center for Housing Studies). She has also served as a contributing editor to both NYRA and BOMB Magazine.

D'Aprile has lectured at Columbia University, Yale University, Newcastle University, and the Venice Architecture Biennale, among others.

She also brings experience working with advocacy and membership organizations, having served on the National Board of Directors of the Democratic Socialists of America (DSA) from 2018 to 2021, and on the Board of Directors of the Architecture Lobby from 2021 to 2022.

D'Aprile received a bachelor of architecture from the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, and a master of science in architecture history & theory from the University of California, Berkeley.

About The Architectural League of New York

Founded in 1881, The Architectural League of New York supports critically transformative work in the allied fields that shape the built environment. As a vital, independent forum, the League stimulates thinking, debate, and action on today's converging crises of racism, inequity, and climate change, in service of a more livable and just world.
